

Let us rejoice,
For it is Spring*

* at this latitude, and warmer than usual because of global warming

It is a time in which our dreams of having Skills in the Arts Herbaceous is recklessly Encourag'd by the rampant Growth of things Large & Small not yet having been dash'd by capricious Weather and wandering Attention.

MAYBE THIS YEAR WILL BE DIFFERENT!

[surprise iris, maybe?]

I marvel at the variety of stuff growing.

This is also the time for the Birds to Getteth Busy because these eggs aren't going to lay themselves, am I right?

How have people already ID'd 18 different bird species on this trail today??

The excuses of winter no longer apply, so now I shall need to Pin my failure to exercise regularly on my own laziness... alas.

h, the Springtime of Oregon!
When I am remindedeth that the weather here is the vanilla ice cream of weathers. Wandering through the Sunsoak'd, empty streets of a city under quarantine, whilst the Synthesizer I have dreamed of for months + finally ordered is delayed in the Middle West
due to a blizzard

he rhythm of the days has been lost, for better or for worse. And at some distant Day when we Dust ourselves

Off and re-enter the world, perhaps it will be like waking from a too-realistic dream, fading as quickly from Memory as it came. Lol.

I n the meantime, I'll be busy remembering what it is Like to actually call people regularly.
I hope.

Das Ende.
